From Rabbi Alan Cook’s Desk

As Rob Ore mentions in his president’s article, the 74th Biennial convention of the Union for Reform Judaism was a wonderful opportunity for prayer, learning, reflection, and networking. Among many inspiring speakers who shared insights with the attendees throughout the conference was Rabbi David Stern. Rabbi Stern is president of the Central Conference of American Rabbis, and serves a congregation in Dallas, Texas.

Rabbi Stern told an anecdote about his childhood: his father, Rabbi Jack Stern (z"l) was also a rabbi, and one evening the family was entertaining guests from the congregation. David and his sister, five year old Elsie, were dressed in their fancy clothes and were expected to be on their best behavior. As they sat down to the meal, Jack Stern asked Elsie to recite the Motzi, which she did quite capably. Then, Jack beamed sweetly at his daughter and asked, “And when do we say Motzi?” Elsie replied, “When we have company!”

Rabbi David Stern went on to weave this story into a wonderful reflection about what it means to “have company.” He opined that in synagogue life, it behooves us to behave as though we always have company. We should constantly strive to put our best foot forward, and to present ourselves (acting as ambassadors of our congregation) in the best possible light. As Rabbi Stern pointed out, “company” in this case means not only companionship, though certainly we value all those who share in the vision of Sinai Temple and choose to “come along for the ride.” Company implies that because of that shared vested interest in the future of our community, we owe it to ourselves and to others to support and strengthen programs, even if we personally will not partake of them or directly reap their benefits.

Rabbi Stern’s remarks (which you can find transcribed online at https://urj.org/blog/2017/12/06/we-have-company-rabbi-david-sterns-address-urj-biennial-2017) focused on the needs of Jewish youth today. But the need for individuals in our community to understand that they have company, (and, in turn, to be understood by others) extends far beyond our young people. To paraphrase Rabbi Stern, anytime someone is feeling lonely, or alone, or underappreciated, “we are going to say, “You have company.” We will say it to newcomers in our midst; we will say it to our longtime members who may feel that they no longer recognize many of the faces who frequent Sinai Temple programs. We will say it to those who are bereaved and mourning; we will say it to those who are celebrating a simcha and rejoicing. This is what makes us a sacred community, and unless we realize that each of us has hopes and needs that are intertwined with those of our “company,” we cannot be our best selves.

In this New Year, let us each resolve to remember that we always have company, and to be on our best behavior for them. Let us each continue to work to make Sinai Temple the friendliest synagogue “Amid the Alien Corn.”

L’Shalom,
Rabbi Alan Cook
I had the honor and pleasure of attending the 74th Biennial of the Union of Reform Judaism held recently in Boston. Accompanying me from our Temple were Rabbi Alan Cook and Toni Lachman, but there were also about 6,000 Reform Jews from congregations large and small from across the U.S. and Canada and around the world. It was a power-packed few days of worship, speeches and meetings that both inspired and informed. It made me realize that our community extends far beyond the limits of our Temple walls.

The twice-daily full plenary sessions we attended were inspiring! They had distinguished speakers drawn from the fields of religion, politics and the arts with messages that united us as Jews and as human beings. Especially moving were the Friday night and Saturday morning Shabbat services we shared with all 6,000 attendees. But there were also smaller sessions designed to allow us to explore and discuss particular aspects of Jewish life and thought, as well as Temple organization and management. I learned from these sessions that we are not alone in the challenges we face at Sinai Temple. Other temples have Boards of Trustees, officers, committees and volunteers, all trying to help their congregations grow and prosper as people and as Jews. Presenters shared with the group issues they have faced in their home temples and some remedies they have tried, which we may be able to apply in our own congregation.

I was particularly struck by how many other congregations have pursued social action initiatives so similar to ours, particularly in forming interfaith alliances with local mosques and churches. Other temples have even hosted interfaith seders at Pesach just as we did last year! It is exciting to know how widespread these efforts are and how many Jews in our movement have seen the wisdom of forming such alliances.

This all gives truth to a phrase used by one of the plenary speakers, Rabbi David Stern: “We have company.” Attending the Biennial showed me how many things unite us with others in our movement. Truly, we are all in it together! If any of these aspects of the Biennial intrigue you, you can check them out at https://urj.org/blog/2017/12/11/relishing-urj-biennial-speeches-video-and-more. If you like what you see, you might want to consider attending the next Biennial, December 11–15, 2019, which will be held at McCormick Place in Chicago.

See you in Temple!

Rob Ore

- Rabbi Alan and Rob Ore reported on the URJ Biennial they had just returned from.
[The Torah compares humans to trees] because, like humans, trees have the power to grow. And as humans have children, so trees bear fruit. And when a human is hurt, cries of pain are heard throughout the world, so when a tree is chopped down, its cries are heard throughout the world. ~ Rashi

Within the first few verses of the Torah, we learn that the environment—all that surrounds us—is of great value. Humans are not mentioned until the 6th day of creation. Commentaries suggest that the first humans could not survive without the sun, vegetation and water. We have a good understanding of the basic needs of people, and it is clear that without warmth from the sun and oxygen from plant life, we could not live. Further study of the text teaches us that there is another reason that God waited until day 6 to add humans to the sequence of creation. We were created at the end of this project in order to teach us to value the land, the sun, the trees, the fish, the animals and the water. We need to understand that we are not more important than the rest of creation. When we understand the significance of the environment and when we understand that our lives depend on its continued existence, then we can do our part in creation to ensure that the delicate balance is maintained.

On the 15th day of the Hebrew month of Shevat (Tu B’shevat), we celebrate a wonderful Jewish holiday that shares its name with the date. Tu B’shevat is known as the Birthday of the Trees. A minor festival, the original observance of Tu B’shevat included bringing a fruit offering to the Temple. In the 16th century, the Kabbalists (mystics living in the city of Tzfat) created a new ritual—the seder—modeled after the traditional Pesach seder. Bringing offerings of fruit to the Temple meant making a sacrifice. Jewish people were expected to make a sacrifice as a way to show thanksgiving and appreciation to God. Today, we are also expected to make sacrifices and to offer thanksgiving to God, but in different ways than our ancestors. Study of the opening piece of text, a commentary written by Rashi, teaches us that we have an obligation to protect our environment from harm.

This year, prepare for Tu B’shevat and make the day a special day. Find a ritual that is meaningful to you and your family and celebrate this day with the Jewish world. Choose a new fruit to eat, have a conversation about how trees help us, make a list of ways things that you can do to lesson your carbon footprint, take a moment to thank God for the many fruits that you eat and for the resources, including fruit, that you get from trees. Tu B’shevat begins on the evening of January 30 and ends at sundown on January 31. We will have a seder at Hebrew school on January 31 as well as a KIDdush Club seder on Sunday, January 28.

The purpose of Sinai Temple is to worship God in accordance with the Jewish faith; to cultivate a love and understanding of Jewish heritage through education; to stimulate fellowship in the Jewish community; to strengthen bonds of loyalty with Jewish people everywhere; and to bring nearer the Dominion of God on earth through an emphasis on righteousness (tzedakah), commandments (mitzvot), and goodwill (gemilut hasidim) to one another and to society at large.
