From Rabbi Alan Cook's Desk

The month of February is designated as African-American History Month. In the United States, and in a handful of other countries, the month serves as an opportunity to reflect upon the important achievements of the African American community in contributing to our nation. Some would advocate that it also serves to encourage us to be mindful of the ongoing struggle for equality for African Americans and other minority populations.

Officially taking the time to pay tribute to African American accomplishments has its origins in "Negro History Week" which was announced for the second week in February by historian Carter G. Woodson, working with the Association for the Study of Negro Life and History. In launching this commemoration, Woodson wrote, "If a race has no history, it has no worthwhile tradition, it becomes a negligible factor in the thought of the world, and it stands in danger of being exterminated. The American Indian left no continuous record. He did not appreciate the value of tradition; and where is he today? The Hebrew keenly appreciated the value of tradition, as is attested by the Bible itself. In spite of worldwide persecution, therefore, he is a great factor in our civilization."

Aside from Woodson's admiration of our people's history in his writings, there are other factors that encourage us to awareness and observance of this month (officially promulgated by President Ford in 1976) within the Jewish community. For one thing, People of Color are increasingly finding a place within the Jewish community; gone are the days (if they ever existed) when all Jews could be described according to a singular genetic archetype. Equally important, however, is the recognition that all minority populations in this country have experienced similar journeys and face similar challenges. We are stronger when we recognize and celebrate the shared narrative that unites the Jewish community and the African American community (along with other minority communities).

The month of February coincides with our lectionary calendar in such a fashion that the Torah readings throughout the month contain the Ten Commandments and other important laws of our tradition. Of course, one of the most significant teachings contained therein—a theme that resonates throughout the Torah—reminds us never to mistreat the stranger, for we recall that we have experience, having ourselves been strangers in the land of Egypt. The Hebrew word for stranger, ger, can also mean outsider—one who is not accepted fully into society.

It is an unfortunate truth that despite our country's lofty aspiration to build a society wherein "all [individuals] are created equal" and seen to be "endowed by their Creator with certain unalienable rights," that there have been those who have been deemed by some to be less equal than others. Let us be inspired, during February's African American History Month, and throughout the year, to continue to celebrate minority populations and to ensure that our nation live up to its promise of "liberty and justice for all."

L'Shalom,

Alan Cook

From the Board

It may be hard to believe amid the cold weather we've been having that Purim is just around the corner! Purim is one of my favorite Jewish holidays. I think of it as a kind of cross between Halloween and Groundhog Day: On the one hand, it is a time to dress up and play, and on the other hand, it is an early harbinger of Spring, coming as it does just 30 days before Pesach. Of course, it is also a serious commemoration of an important event in Jewish history: The prevention of the killing by Haman of all the Jews in Persia by the intervention of Esther, as related in the Book of Esther. Even when we retell the story each year in a different, whimsical way, the significance shines through. Our celebration this year takes place on February 28. Come and join the revels—dinner, Purim Shpiel and Megillah reading, all beginning at 5:30. As part of the celebration, you can send Purim greetings—Shalach Manot—to those both in and outside the Temple community, thanks to the Religious Education Committee. See your letter from the Temple for details!

We continue to move closer to renovating our sacred and social spaces in the Temple. As I've related in previous letters, the Board hired Ratio Associates to create a schematic design for the renovation. Now, we have convened the Temple Renovation Committee, whose charge is to gather ideas and designs that have been used by other temples to augment and flesh out Ratio's designs and help us accomplish our goals. The committee ultimately will make recommendations to the Board for the project. The Development Committee is also meeting to develop a framework for how our community can raise the needed funds for the renovation project. Be on the lookout for announcements of general congregational meetings which will provide avenues for everyone to offer feedback on this project. All involved want to do their due diligence to ensure that that this redesign serves our congregation well into the future. The pacing may seem very deliberate, but I am confident it is leading us to a beautiful and exciting finished product. If you decide you'd like to contribute to the project ahead of official fundraising efforts, you can make a donation to the Arthur Robinson Fund.

Sinai Religious School is back in full swing. I'd also like to remind you of the First Friday Services. Those of us who have been coming to these services regularly have noticed how much their popularity has increased, even in spite of the weather that has occasionally been inclement! If you have friends who have not yet attended a service at Sinai, or who have not been active recently, why not invite them to a First Friday? It is a wonderful opportunity to meet other congregants and enjoy one of Rabbi Alan's gourmet dinners. Finally, our first major fundraiser of the New Year will take place on Saturday, February 17. It will be a Trivia Night, your opportunity to test your knowledge and memory, have some delicious treats, and spend quality time with your friends, while also providing financial support to the Temple. If you haven't already done so, I urge you to make your reservation as soon as possible. You can contact Bart Greenberger or the Temple office for further details. I think it will be a lot of fun for everybody!

See you in Temple!

From our Educator

At the very end of the month, we will begin the celebration of Purim. So many people enjoy this holiday because we dress up in costumes, make noise, eat sweets and have a party. It is a great excuse to break out the Halloween costume you may have purchased in October (and a great reason to take advantage of post-Halloween sales). The story follows the trope that characterizes Jewish existence—we are oppressed and then we overcome the oppression. This is certainly a reason to celebrate and give thanks to those who fought for freedom and a compelling reason to continue to fight for justice today.

Initially, the heroine of the story, Esther, hides her identity. Her name actually shares root letters with a Hebrew word nistar which means “hidden”. Esther does not tell King Achashverosh, her husband, that she is a Jew. Mordecai tells her to keep this part of her identity a secret as a way to secure her place in the kingdom. It is probably the case that each of us has masks that we hide behind. Our circumstances determine how freely and openly we can share who we are. Do you act the same whether you are at home or at a work function? Do you greet people you know exactly as you greet people you are meeting for the first time?

A second figure is hidden from the Purim story. God is not mentioned in the Biblical text and commentary suggests that it is because God is hidden, rather than absent. We glean from this the need to search for God in all spaces and places. It may seem that God is present when we are at Shabbat services, lighting Hanukkah candles or at a Passover seder because we are aware of the Jewish context. With a bit of searching, it is possible that you might find God at a basketball game, while playing at a park or at a birthday celebration.

This year, when you put on your Purim costume, consider the other masks that you wear, when you wear them and why you wear them. Celebrate being you and realize that everyone you know has masks that they wear too.

Please don't forget to participate in the Purim Basket Fundraiser! Help support Sinai Temple Religious School and share the joy of Purim with friends, acquaintances and family!
