Happy New Year

From Rabbi Alan Cook's Desk

I write this message as I sit with more than 100 of my rabbinic colleagues at a two-day conference on moral leadership through the rabbinate. We are exploring how the voices of prophetic Judaism can continue to inspire us in modern times to engage in tikkun olam. In this context, we might define tikkun olam as “making the world a better place by working in partnership with God.”

My colleague, Rabbi Seth Limmer, reminded all of us that we must remember that the task of the classic prophets whose writings are recorded in the Tanach was often a thankless one. Though those prophets of the Northern Kingdom preached against the Assyrians, and the prophets of the Southern Kingdom preached against the Babylonians, none of them were able, through words alone, to stave off the threats posed by these outside empires. It was only through building coalitions, bringing others on board, convincing others to embrace the visions that they were espousing.

As we enter a new secular year, we have the opportunity to envision a world of justice and compassion, and to build coalitions of power that will bring such visions to fruition. For some of us, this will be new work; for others, it will be the continuation of a passion that has commanded our attention for weeks, or months, or years, or a lifetime.

There are some who may feel that some of the issues that present themselves are political in nature. Indeed, as our nation has become increasingly polarized politically, some people have shied away from expressing their visions and embracing their passions for fear that their taking a position on the topic will be construed as a political expression. But I believe that we are called, both as ethical individuals and as Jews hearkening to the wisdom of our ancient tradition, to take a stand on the pressing moral issues of our time.

It is a moral imperative (and a Jewish one) to help people worldwide (including those in our own country) have access to clean drinking water.

It is a moral imperative (and a Jewish one) to support the right of all students to learn in a comfortable and safe environment, irrespective of sexual orientation, race, or socioeconomic class.

It is a moral imperative (and a Jewish one) to protect those who are ill from becoming financially insolvent while they undergo medical treatments.

It is a moral imperative (and a Jewish one) to ensure safety and security in our schools, places of worship, and other gathering places, so that we do not stand idle while our neighbors bleed.

It is a moral imperative (and a Jewish one) to clothe the naked, feed the hungry, and provide shelter for those who lack.

This list, of course, is not exhaustive. You may have other passions or discover other unmet needs toward which you can contribute your time and energies in order to create a more just and fair society.

The Mishnah tractate Pirke Avot teaches us, “You are not required to complete the task, but neither are you free to abstain from it.” It will take many minds, hands, and hearts working together to fulfill the mission of tikkun olam. But if we collectively begin to address the world’s moral needs, together we can make a difference in this new year.

L’Shalom,

Rabbi Alan Cook

Bulletin Submission: The deadline to submit information for the February Bulletin is January 15th. All submissions may be edited for length and content. EMAIL submissions to: Roxanna Davison, assistant@sinaitemplecu.org.

Several members of the Sinai Temple congregation recently attended a breakfast held at the I-Hotel, an annual fundraising event sponsored by Faith in Place, an organization uniting faith groups with the common goal of improving our environment. Rabbi Alan presented the convocation for the meeting, discussing passages from Torah and Midrash. I'd like to tell you a little about this group.

First, a little history. In 1998, an organization called Interfaith Power & Light was formed to address climate and environmental concerns from the perspective of religious practice. All religions call upon their adherents to be good stewards of the earth, so this was a natural point of confluence on which people of many faiths could agree and work together. Within a year, an Illinois affiliate was created, called Faith in Place. The efforts began in the Chicago area, but it wasn't long until the movement spread downstate. In Illinois, there are now 110 faith communities involved. Sinai Temple is one of the newest.

As reported on during our breakfast meeting, several congregations in Central Illinois have taken steps to make their communities "greener." For example, during the past year, McKinley Foundation on campus created raised gardens on their property to grow vegetables to donate to the food pantry at Garden Hills School. This project required the participation of hundreds of volunteers. Other efforts have included installation of solar panels and reduction of landfill waste.

So how does a faith community join this effort? The first step is to form a "Green Team" to gather together people in the congregation interested in environmental matters. Our Green Team, which was started last year, meets regularly with the Faith in Place group of Champaign-Urbana.

Our Green Team has been working on several initiatives. The Board of Trustees recently approved Sinai Temple's participation in a local "Solar Farm." The idea is to create a large-scale "farm" of solar panels that would provide extra energy to the electrical grid, thereby lessening the need for energy coming from fossil fuels. Those who participate are being offered lower cost electricity by Ameren. Initially, the program is being made available to area faith communities, and Sinai will be one of them. It is estimated that by joining this effort, we can save up to 20% on our electric bills. The Green Team is sponsoring a "Green Oneg" after Friday night services on January 18. This oneg will feature locally produced foods served on non-disposable dishes. There are some common-sense steps all of us can take to be greener, and our team will help us learn about some of them. This will be an excellent opportunity to meet the members of our team and find out more about their activities.

The Team has been working with Rabbi Jody and the Hebrew High students to distribute recycling containers in all the classrooms. Our kids can teach us all how to live more sustainably. Being aware of what we're doing is the first step to reducing our footprint on Earth.

So, I encourage everyone to find out what we can do to reduce our impact on the Earth's resources. With everyone's help, we can make sure that the Earth we leave to our descendants will nurture them as it has nurtured us.

See you in Temple!

SINAI TEMPLE DECEMBER 2018 BOARD MEETING

The rabbi's D'var Torah this month reminded us of the Joseph narrative. He's known for being a big dreamer, and we know that in various times in his life, Joseph's brothers and others tried to diminish the power and purpose of his dreams. Nevertheless, he persisted and didn't give up in the power of his dreams—we should also be persistent in our desires and our vision.

- ✧ Upcoming events of interest to the community: Sinai Trivia Night coming up on Feb. 23, and a Yiddish song evening on February 2. Both will take place at the temple.
- ✧ The board approved a new membership application from Tamarra Rennick and Andrew Bernstein.
- ✧ Sanford Hess from the Sinai Renovation Committee updated us on renovation progress. Ratio Design is no longer available to work with us. The board voted to request a concept design from Landau|Zinder, a firm known for its synagogue design work that we had been considering previously.
- ✧ The Sinai Security Committee met again after Thanksgiving. The committee recently sent out a survey by email to the congregation. The survey had questions around security features we could implement, costs, and whether people in our community feel safe at the temple. The results will inform the next stage of medium-to-long-term planning.

TU BISHVAT AND MLK—YOUTH DAY OF ACTION

On January 21, we have a great opportunity to engage the children in our community in learning about TIKKUN OLAM—repairing the world. On a day when several area secular schools are not in session, Sinai Temple Religious School will sponsor a Youth Day of Action. Kids in Kindergarten through 8th grades will come together to learn about Tu BiShvat—the Jewish holiday celebrating the birthday of the trees, and Martin Luther King Jr. Activities will focus on ways that we can improve our world. We will learn through doing and will emphasize the importance of acting justly and taking responsibility for our world.

Please sign up by emailing Rabbi Jody by January 14. Please include the following information in your sign up email: Name and grade of child/children and any relevant medical or behavioral information

Cost: The program will be $30 per child. Open to families who are not enrolled in Sinai Temple Religious School—cost is $40 per child. Payment due at check in for the program.

Please send a lunch (no tree nuts or peanuts please, no mixing of dairy/meat) and a bag of clean, “found items” for our maker space/recycled goods project.

Check in will be from 8:30-9:00, all participants need to be picked up by 4:30.

SAMPLE ACTIVITIES:

- Tu BiShvat (Birthday of the Trees) seder
- Make recycled seed paper to plant in a garden or pot

UPDATE FROM SINAI RENOVATION COMMITTEE

The month of December was an eventful one for the Sinai Renovation Committee (SRC). The local architecture firm that was selected to design the changes had a staff departure and decided that they have too many work projects pending, so they have chosen not to continue working on Sinai's renovation.

This change has brought about an opportunity to return to another architect option that the SRC like a lot: Landau|Zinder—a firm out of New Jersey who specialize in synagogue architecture, with many examples of synagogue renovation and construction in their portfolio. Despite the change in plans, we hope that the schedule will be impacted by only a few months. We are already underway planning for their first visit, which will begin an intense period of design that will last through the Spring of 2019. During this design phase there will be opportunities for everyone to offer their input.

In the meantime, the SRC has continued to clarify our design priorities and prepare ourselves for the process ahead. While we are disappointed at the time we've lost getting started, we are excited to work with Landau|Zinder and look forward to a productive 2019.

Please join the Urbana Yiddish Ensemble on Saturday, February 2nd at 7 PM for a free evening of Yiddish music at Sinai Temple. This cabaret event showcases Yiddish theater songs, Yiddish traditional folk songs, and lively klezmer instrumental music (with dancing!). Watch for more information in upcoming emails.
